Low impact development (lid) is an innovative approach to help manage and effectively treat stormwater. These methods are typically modeled after nature and can include the following: rain gardens, naturalized areas, and grassed swales. The main priority of lids is to control runoff, increase stormwater infiltration and improve water quality.